How replications can exist in a world of publish or perish

Mittwoch, 14. Mai 2025 09:00 (1 Stunde)

“You break it, you buy it” is the pottery barn rule that Srivastava (2012) suggested scientific to adopt with regards to publishing replications: They should publish replications for all original studies that they chose to publish. More than one decade later, journals do not adopt this rule, opening a gap for high-quality and researcher-led journals. I discuss how Replication Research is thought of a go-to journal for replication studies and why original journals should not be authors’ first choice for publishing replications.
